KOALA BREEDING PROGRAM
LOOK & LEARN, PLEASE DON'T HANDLE.

EASTERN KOALA

Koalas live in eucalypt forest in eastern Australia. They prefer trees growing on fertile soil. Southern Koalas are considerably larger than northern ones.

The Koala body is extremely suited to life in the rainforest. Its dense, grey-brown, woolly fur is waterproof. Each fore paw has two thumb-like, not all digits and is strong, sharp claws. A Koala's big ball-like body has not a single rib.

Koalas eat eucalypt leaves, which have low energy content. This means Koalas sleep for up to 20 hours per day.

Koalas live alone, except when raising young in a nest. A male Koala leaves a territory that may include areas of the home range of several females. The male calls loudly to attract females that are ready to mate.

Female Koalas mate 1 year in her next spring growth for 4 months. The baby rides on her mother's back for a further 6 months.

The Koala is threatened by disease and building. However, habitat destruction by humans is probably the greatest threat to its survival.

SOUTHERN BROWN BANDICOOT

The Southern Brown Bandicoot is found in south-western and south-eastern Australia.

It is the size of a cat, with a pointed muzzle, pointed back and thin tail. It is grey-brown above and white below. It bounds when moving fast.

During the day, a bandicoot shelters alone in a ground nest. At night it feeds on worms, insects and fungi. Cone-shaped holes show where a bandicoot has been digging for food.

Up to 6 young ones are carried in a rear-opening pouch. They are weaned at around 6 weeks.

Each bandicoot needs a home range of up to 2ha to find enough food. Ranges may overlap if food is plentiful.

Bandicoots need places to hide from dogs, foxes, cats and other dangers. They disappear from an area when undergrowth is cleared.

LONG-NOSED POTROO

This little hopping marsupial was described near Sydney by Governor Phillip in 1789. Since then, its numbers and range have dwindled as its habitat has been cleared.

It lives in the coastal south-east of Australia, in forests and heaths with sandy soil and thick groundcover. It had not been seen in Western Australia for over 100 years until rediscovered at Two Peoples Bay in 1994.

It is a fat-cat-sized marsupial with grasping paws and short feet. It has grey-brown fur, and bare skin stretches from its nose up its long snout.

Fact File

The Barn Owl may be found all over Australia, especially in open woodland and on plains. It may live around farms and in caves.

It is a medium-sized, pale-coloured owl, with a heart-shaped, white facial disc. The eyes are dark. The bill and long, bare legs are pale. The bird has white underparts, with grey-gold upper parts, and black and white spots on the wings.

The call is a rasping hiss, like cloth ripping.

Barn owls roost during the day in the hollows, foliage or caves. Pellets of food remains accumulate under roosts.

They hunt mice and other small mammals after dark, locating prey by sound and keen night vision. Numbers build up in mouse plagues, but afterwards many owls die.

The nest is in a tree hollow or cave.

The laying female incubates the 3 - 7 white eggs for 33 - 35 days. The male feeds the chicks.

They grow to a length of 300 - 400mm.
